Mr. F. H. Underwood is at work upon a life of J. G. Whittier, and has been gathering facts in the valley of the Merrimae. French publishers are still taking the lead of the Britons in issuing cheap books, Messrs. Hachette are bringing out French classics at the amazingly cheap rate of about three cents each.

General Simon Cameron is quoted as saying that he has thought of writing a history of American politics, but that he is now too old. "Writing is irksome to me," he says, "and I have not enough energy even to dictate so extended a work."

The conductors of The American Antiquarian and Oriental Journal are now assuing circulars to collectors, and intend to publish interesting facts concerning the relies found in the private cabinets of

The Christmas number of Harper's Magazine is to eontain contributions from Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Edmund C. Stedman, T. B. Aldrich, William Black, Thomas Hardy, W. D. Howells and other distinguished writers.

Mr. Austin Dobson has deducated his pretty volume of "Eighteenth Century Essays" to Anne Thackeray Ritchie. The book contains thirty-four of the best essays of a century; and its compiler has amassed in an appendix a delightful set of Carlyle's reminiscences of his Irish journey have been welcomed by a universal note of indignation. The most lenient critic cannot forbear to express disgust at the dyspeptic Scotchman's invariable sneers at everybody who was kind and hospitable to him during that journey.

Mile. Dosue, the sister-in-law of M. Thiers, is disinclined to publish the notes forming a history of his time which she has recently discovered in his handwriting. She will probably be persuaded, however, and future historians will have the benefit of these valuable memoranda, sketches and anecdotes.

The daughter of Bewick, the famous engraver, is still alive at the age of ninety-two; and by the venerable lady's desire, a "Memorial Edition" of her father's works is to be produced in a limited edition, with impressions from the original wood blocks. There will be five octave volumes, and only 650 copies will be printed.

Victor Hugo has many unpublished works in his desk, among others a drama of modern life entitled "La Faim," a third series of "La Legende des Siècles," a volume of political satires, and an epic called "La Fin de Satan." The poet is said to have declared that he should leave ready for the press almost as many volumes as he has already

The face of Richard Wagner, as pictured in the frontispiece of the forthcoming Century, shows an extraordinary combination of a rength and weakness. The accompanying paper on the composer-"How Wagner makes Operas," is the work of Mr John R. G. Hassard. Among other articles in this number is one on the studios of the chief London artists, the illustrations of which show that these gentlemen do not lack for beauty and luxury in

There is a pleasant little note about Thackeray in Mrs. Kemble's volume just printed in England, her "Records of Later Life," The novelist was "sick with fright" in the maurais quart d'heure before the delivery of his first lecture. In her anxiety to be of service to him she had scattered his notes about the room, "My dear soul," was the only remark, "you could not have done better for me. have just a quarter of an hour to wait, and it will take me about that to page this again." In Mr. Lear's recently published biography of Lacordaire there is a curious passage illustrating the surprising temporary force which the Dominican's oratory sometimes had. When he preached at Bordeaux, it is said that the commercial travellers at all the hotels (not a specially religious class then or now) insisted on being pro wided with du maigre, or fasting fare. It is much to be feared that they did not keep up the habit long. A certain learned, orthodox and pious person once scribed the effect of pulpit oratory of Lacordaire's florid sort in the following terms: "When you hear ----," he said, " you make up your mind that you won't ever do anything again that you have done before; but by the time you get to the door, cially if there is a crowd, you begin to think that you will."

Mr. Robert Buchanan has no more anger to expend on those whom he once called "fleshly poets."
"If," he writes to The Academy concerning his
"Martyrdom of Madeline," "your reviewer refers to Mr. Swinbarne, to Mr. Morris, to Mr. Rossetti, and to those whom I once classed as their disciples, I beg leave to reassert that my satire concerns not them, though it may, I suppose, have a certain retro-spective application to writings which were merely a phase of their genius. Mr. Swinburne has long left the pastoral region shepherded by the impec-cable Gautier; he has risen to heights of clear and beautiful purpose, where I gladly do homage to him. Mr. Morris may be passed by without a word; he needs no apology of mine. Mr. Rossetti, I freely admit now, never was a fleshly poet at all-never, at any rate, fed upon the poisonous honey of French

Washington, July 11.—The Secretary of the Interior has rendered a decision in the case of the Virginia and Gilded Age mining claims located within the limits of the town site of Tombstone, Arizona. In his decision, the Secretary holds that the usual clause of reservation in favor of the occupants of town property shall be inserted in the mineral patents—thus recalling so much of the original decision of December 30, 1881, as required the commissioner to investigate the question of allegged priority. The Secretary further holds—following his recent decision in the Rice case—that these questions are properly determinable in the local courts, and that a clause of reservation, operating only as notice of a possible adverse right, should be inserted to assure the protection of all the interests involved.

 While the transactions in stocks to-day (411,402 ares) aggregate about the same amount as yesters ay, the speculations developed a feverish tone. At the pening of business prices were irregular, those for ome stocks being higher, noticeably that for Pacific nail, while for others there was an immediate sharp ecline, which before it reached its end dropped the shole market down. Later on there was a sharp ally followed by another decline that extended all ver the market, and finally there was a partial reovery just at the close. Notwithstanding the day's et-back and that prices for nearly everything the lower than they were last evening the temper of the average speculator is still "bullish," and the general disposition to regard the decline as a "healthful reaction."

nly change in the final bids is a decline of 4 for he 4s. Annexed are the closing quotation: Bid. Asked.
